Shrek the Sheep

A male Merino sheep in New Zealand who gained fame in 2004, Shrek avoided being caught and shorn for six years. Merinos are normally shorn annually, but Shrek apparently hid in caves to avoid his shepherd. When he was finally caught and shorn, his fleece contained enough wool to make 20 large men's suits. At the time of shearing, an average male Merino fleece weighs 10-18 lbs — his fleece weighed 60 lbs.
